SUMMARY

Current and past university students will discuss their recent and past efforts to organize around human rights issues in a university setting as well as where their organizing has taken them beyond the university.

OBJECTIVES

- Participants will understand past and ongoing efforts by university students to address contemporary human rights abuses.
- Participants will gain knowledge about campus organization models for organizing around human rights abuses.
- Participants will learn about how university students approach their activism and organizing beyond their undergraduate years.
- Participants will learn from Minnesota youth about the ICE occupation of Minnesota, how they have been and continue to be affected by it, and their response to it.
